Motivational Statement (250 words)

ENYGO is currently offering tremendous development opportunities for young gynaecologist oncologists. This is especially true in the face of new challenges today, such as the COVID-19 pandemic.

I believe that the main efforts of the national representative should be aimed at raising awareness of these opportunities, increasing the number of ESGO-ENYGO members and their effective interaction.

Further training, participation in educational events, acquaintance with the experience of colleagues abroad, collaboration for conducting clinical trials, gaining experience in scientific publications that ENYGO provides are absolutely necessary to improve the quality of patient care.

I think the previous representatives have done a great job and have shown a great example of effective organization. But it is also a high standard of work for all followers. Therefore, further development becomes extremely important.

I believe that national representatives can play a significant role in the development of such areas as the institution of mentoring and early career research; promoting short clinical visits and fellowships; international tumor boards and brainstorming sessions. This is especially true in countries such as Belarus, where the membership of young professionals in international societies and participation in educational activities abroad is not yet widespread enough. Getting involved in this process without adequate support can be difficult and time-consuming.

The opportunity to become a national representative for me means a great responsibility for achieving the above goals. However, it is also an interesting experience and an opportunity to take the initiative.
