Motivational Statement (250 words)

It is with pleasure that I am applying for the ENYGO NATREP position to represent France.

I have settled in France since 2016 and am currently a gynecologic oncology fellow at Oscar Lambret Cancer Center (Lille).

I've recently joined the ENYGO scientific committee. I am an active member of the French society of surgical oncology, French Society of Gynecologic Oncology, French young gynecologic oncologist's society (SFOG Campus), and a scientific committee member of the Euro-Lebanese Medical Society.

I am interested in clinical research as well as the ethical aspects of it. This year I will be completing my master's degree in medical ethics at the University of Paris.

Being multilingual (fluent in Arabic, English, French, and intermediate in German), an active member of different societies, and having worked in various countries during my residency (Lebanon, Germany, and the USA) before settling in France allow me to have a global perspective thus bringing innovative ideas and help connect people throughout the different countries. This would help strengthen the link between the French and European GYN-oncology networks to create new collaborations and improve research in this field.

As to my personality, I am a hard worker and primarily a team worker with good planning and organizational skills.

In conclusion, representing France will allow me to actively participate in advancing science, thus providing better care for our patients, who are the primary motivation for what we do. On top of that, it will help me learn from internationally renowned colleagues.
